

CASE MANAGEMENT BRIEF Participant: Brandon Laterrance Swearinger Date Completed: 07/17/2026 Prepared by: Center Director

1. Risk Profile Risk Level: High (Score: 27). Primary Domains:

1. Antisocial Pattern (Main Driver).
2. Procriminal Attitude/Orientation (Secondary Driver).
3. Education/Employment.

Domain Indicators:

- Antisocial Pattern: Early onset of juvenile arrests (around age 15) and a diverse adult record that includes official records of assault, violence, weapons possession, and prior community supervision violations.
- Procriminal Attitude/Orientation: Minimizes his federal conviction, claiming he was sentenced based on "sheer speculation" and "word of mouth" without hard proof like wiretaps or controlled buys. Expresses that the courts treated him with disrespect and his 20-year sentence was "extremely too hard".
- Education/Employment: At 41 years old, the participant has never held a payroll job or been employed for a full year in the community, working only institutional jobs for pennies during his 16-year incarceration.

2. Behavioral Indicators Participant demonstrates a strong tendency to engage in denial and minimization, frequently making excuses for his behavior and minimizing the validity of his criminal record. He harbors hostility and resentment toward the justice system, feeling he was unfairly targeted with a superseding federal drug conspiracy charge only after beating state charges. Interpersonally, he describes himself as a "loner" who avoids eye contact, speaks very little, and feels uncomfortable in groups, yet clinical notes indicate he can also present as superficially charming. Historically, he has shown impulsive, poor self-management skills and a readiness for assaultive behavior, though he now claims he avoids conflict by staying calm and walking away.

3. Pattern Over Time First arrested and entered the justice system around 15 or 16 years of age. His adult criminal trajectory rapidly escalated in his early 20s from simple marijuana possession to violent and weapons-related charges, including Assault and Battery of a High and Aggravated Nature (ABHAN), possession of a weapon during a violent crime, and pointing/presenting a firearm. He recently completed 16 years of a 240-month federal sentence for a drug conspiracy charge. Recidivism and compliance history shows at least one prior probation/parole violation before his long-term incarceration.

4. Acute / Emergency Needs The participant completely lacks foundational identification documents; he has no state ID, birth certificate, or social security card on hand, relying only on a prison ID. Securing these documents is an immediate emergency need to allow him to test for his driver's permit and secure employment. He also noted a lack of transportation as an emergency need upon intake.

5. Structural Stability Factors Currently residing in a Federal BOP Halfway House. Benefits from a very stable and supportive family structure, reporting strong, argument-free relationships with his mother, aunts, cousins, and his girlfriend. He achieved his GED while incarcerated. His complete lack of community work experience is a major structural barrier to immediate self-sufficiency. Reports abstaining from current alcohol or drug use, noting he does not drink and has been removed from drug networks during his 16-year sentence.

6. Legal & Placement Constraints Currently living in a Federal BOP Halfway House with an expected transition to home confinement in December, and a projected halfway house release date of 12/13/2026. Subject to a 10-year term of federal supervised release. His federal judgment legally mandates participation in an intensive substance abuse treatment program with testing, vocational training, and financial or consumer credit counseling. No Sex Offender Registry requirements.

7. Responsivity & Engagement Profile Participant is interpersonally anxious, shy, and struggles to make new friends, preferring to isolate. He reports experiencing "PTSD" triggers related to his long incarceration (e.g., the sound of doors closing, counts) and possesses high skepticism and sensitivity toward the justice system. His primary motivation for change is heavily tied to a desire to be a "better dad, be a better son, be financially stable," and to secure long-term job security by learning a new trade (welding, plumbing, or electrical). He responds well to cognitive reframing regarding consequences; he actively talks himself out of criminal urges by reminding himself that "the long-term benefits outweigh the short-term benefit". Programs should leverage this practical, goal-oriented rationalization style.
